Drive initial implementation and daily execution for planning, analyzing, forecasting, and distribution of merchandise while adhering to company and divisional strategies.

Merchandise planning manager

Build, forecast, manage, and conduct weekly/monthly review of category financial plans through historical, seasonal, and current trend analysis. Manage a replenishment buyer/allocator team to ensure consistent execution against merchandise plans. Approve planogram purchase orders.

Market development manager

Responsible for the development and marketing of a product through the product life cycle using a combination of marketing, sales enablement, and technical and financial acumen to maintain or increase sales and profit margins. Use strategic analysis and market research to understand the needs of customers or to improve the existing product portfolio.

Utilize marketing research to complete in-depth analysis of competitor strengths and weaknesses. Develop strategies to gain profitable market share. Create marketing strategies and key messaging for product portfolio or market segment. After careful analysis, assist in pricing of products to meet organizational profitability goals.

Visual merchandiser

Leverage creativity, imagination, passion for fashion, and knowledge of latest trends. Organize, supervise, and check the product in every section of the store. Check and monitor section sale forecasts, monitor the forecast, know the reports, and propose action plans. Share product improvement comments and ideas with store director/subdirector.

Store planning project manager

Creatively implement merchant strategies that align with field needs, and translate this information into brand placement in each store location. Produce store designs that meet both merchandising and field requirements, while addressing the needs of customers. Utilize space productivity data and facilitate inventory in a computerized system. These individuals are heavily involved in the planning and execution for special projects and new stores, in addition to retrofits.
